

THE ELGAR COMPANION TO
Gender and Global Migration
Beyond Western Research

E | Content
Elgar

Edited by
Natalia Ribas-Mateos • Saskia Sassen

© Natalia Ribas-Mateos and Saskia Sassen 2022

Cover image: 'Multitud' (Crowd) by Anna Agustí Hontagas.

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical or photocopying, recording, or otherwise without the prior permission of the publisher.

Published by Edward Elgar Publishing Limited
The Lypiatts
15 Lansdown Road
Cheltenham
Glos GL50 2JA
UK

Edward Elgar Publishing, Inc.
William Pratt House
9 Dewey Court
Northampton
Massachusetts 01060
USA

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library

Library of Congress Control Number: 2022944499

This book is available electronically in the Elgaronline
Sociology, Social Policy and Education subject collection
<http://dx.doi.org/10.4337/9781802201260>

ISBN 978 1 80220 125 3 (cased)
ISBN 978 1 80220 126 0 (eBook)

Contributors

Luciano G. Alfaya	People-Environment Research Group, Universidade da Coruña, Spain
Asaf Augusto	University of Bayreuth, Germany
Cynthia Bejarano	New Mexico State University, USA
Sana Benbelli	Hassan II University of Casablanca, Morocco
Henri Yambene Bomono	National Centre for Education, Ministry of Scientific Research and Innovation, Cameroon
Lesley Braun	University of Basel, Switzerland
Clara Camps Calvet	Dept. of Sociology, University of Barcelona, Spain
Fabio Magalhães Candotti	Federal University of Amazonas, Brazil
Chiara Denaro	Trento University, Italy
Angels Escrivà	Universidad de Huelva, Spain
Sarah Ettallab	Hassan II University of Casablanca, Morocco
Marcos Linhares Goes	Institute of Social Sciences, University of Lisbon, Portugal
Anne Gonon	Doshisha University, Japan
Constance De Gourey	Aix-Marseille Université, France
Mandana Hendessi	Social Development Consultant, London, UK
Chieh Hsu	Assistant Professor of Intercultural Competence, St.Gallen Institute of Management in Asia, University of St. Gallen, Switzerland
Laura Lamas-Abraira	Researcher for the Access IN (Social Inclusion and Access to Basic Services of Third-Country Nationals) project, UAB
Amelia Sáiz López	INTERASIA-UAB, Spain
Rita Manchanda	South Asia Forum for Human Rights, India
Jorge Malheiros	Associate Professor and Researcher – Institute of Geography and Spatial Planning, University of Lisbon, Portugal
Alexandra Martínez	Departamento de Sociología, Pontificia Universidad Javeriana, Colombia
Flávia Melo	Federal University of Amazonas, Brazil
Raquel Nazário Motta	Faculty of Psychology of the University of Lisbon, Portugal

Fadma Ait Mous	Hassan II University of Casablanca, Morocco
Patricia Muñiz Núñez	Universidade da Coruña, Spain
Enara Echart Muñoz	Complutense University of Madrid, Spain
Dino Di Nella	University of Barcelona, Spain
José Miguel Nieto Olivar	University of São Paulo, Brazil
Laura Velasco Ortiz	El Colegio de la Frontera Norte, Mexico
Laura Oso	ESOMI, University of A Coruña, Spain
Tullio Prestileo	Infection Disease & Health, Migration Unit, Palermo Civic Hospital, Italy
Natalia Ribas-Mateos	Universitat Autònoma de Barcelona, Spain and Mesopolhis, Aix-Marseille University, France
Aracely Martínez Rodas	Universidad del Valle de Guatemala, Guatemala
Markus Rudolf	Bonn International Centre for Conflict Studies, Germany
Elisabet Almeda Samaranch	Dept. of Sociology, University of Barcelona, Spain
Ma. Eugenia Hernández Sánchez	Universidad Autónoma de Ciudad Juárez, Mexico
Saskia Sassen	Columbia University, USA
Jasvinder Sidhu	Federation University Australia, Australia
Supriya Singh	College of Business and Law, Royal Melbourne Institute of Technology, Australia
Sofia Stimmatini	Université Libre de Bruxelles, Belgium
Tassah Ivo Tawe	National Centre for Education, Ministry of Scientific Research and Innovation, Cameroon
Ángel del Valle	Population Council, Guatemala
María del Carmen Villarreal	Federal University of the State of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil
Ramón Zamora	Universidad del Valle de Guatemala, Guatemala

Contents

List of contributors	viii
1 Introduction to The Elgar Companion to Gender and Global Migration Natalia Ribas-Mateos and Saskia Sassen	1
PART I BACKGROUND
2 A state-of-the-art review and future directions in gender and migration research Laura Lamas-Abraira	24
3 Revisiting the gender, migration and development nexus through the circulation of assets approach Laura Oso	38
4 The absent image of women: lacunae in the legacy of French colonial mobilities Natalia Ribas-Mateos	49
PART II LATIN AMERICA
5 Extractivism, forced gendered migration and resistance in Latin America and the Caribbean María del Carmen Villarreal and Enara Echart Muñoz	85
6 Women and punishment in Abya Yala Elisabet Almeda Samaranch, Clara Camps Calvet and Dino Di Nella	98
7 Scientific mobilities in the twentieth century: Gustaf Bolinder's photographs of indigenous women in the Sierra Nevada de Santa Marta Alexandra Martínez	110
8 Embodying ethnic and labor relations: indigenous women and US– Mexico labor mobility circuits in the agrifood industry Laura Velasco Ortiz	125
9 Desértica Feminista: collision of theories, identity, and [im]migrant– border encounters Ma. Eugenia Hernández Sánchez and Cynthia Bejarano	134
10 Women's mobilities: a blacklight on gender and care in the Amazon José Miguel Nieto Olivar, Fabio Magalhães Candotti and Flávia Melo	148

- 11 Lack of opportunities for indigenous young women in Guatemala:
forced mobility and absence of social protection systems 162
Aracely Martínez Rodas, Ángel del Valle and Ramón Zamora

PART III ASIA

- 12 A study of the lives of internally displaced women after the Fukushima disaster 173
Anne Gonon
- 13 Chinese internal migration dynamics as a way of understanding globalization and gender 181
Amelia Sáiz López
- 14 Shifting categories and recast boundaries: Chinese women in transnational and family migration 188
Chieh Hsu
- 15 Qualified Brazilian migrant women in Dubai: constraints, agency, and change in the migratory process 197
Raquel Nazário Motta, Marcos Linhares Goes and Jorge Malheiros
- 16 In the eye of the storm: Afghan women and girls navigating displacement 212
Mandana Hendessi
- 17 Gender conflict and forced migration in India: human rights perspectives 222
Rita Manchanda
- 18 Remittances, migration and economic abuse: 'invisible in plain sight' 233
Supriya Singh and Jasvinder Sidhu

PART IV AFRICA

- 19 Women and cross-border trade between Angola and the Democratic Republic of the Congo 241
Asaf Augusto and Lesley Braun
- 20 The Anglophone crisis and migratory patterns in Cameroon: some social and economic implications for women 254
Tassah Ivo Tawe and Henri Yambene Bomono
- 21 Humanitarian tropes in the Casamance: presumptions about gender-based violence in conflict and displacement contexts 265
Markus Rudolf

PART V THE MEDITERRANEAN

- 22 Missing in the Mediterranean: a perspective from Tunisian mothers 278
Sofia Stimmatini and Constance De Gourcy

23	Origins of extreme violence in Palermo: health (infectious) impact of the trans-Saharan/Mediterranean route for women on the move Tullio Prestileo and Natalia Ribas-Mateos	287
24	Gender and humanitarian issues in transitional shelter processes: the cases of Syrian refugees and displaced communities by the earthquake in Haiti Patricia Muñiz Núñez and Luciano G. Alfaya	301
25	Sub-Saharan and Syrian women’s embodying migration experiences in Casablanca Fadma Ait Mous, Sana Benbelli and Sarah Ettallab	311
PART VI EUROPE
26	Globalization and health: gender issues in temporary agricultural work (Huelva) Angels Escrivà	324
27	Squatting in a “home”: intersectional struggles of migrant women in Lucha y Siesta (Rome) Chiara Denaro	334
Index		352

- Lara, S., and H. De Grammont (2003), "Jornaleros agrícolas y migración temporal en las empresas hortícolas mexicanas", Este País, 148, 63–68, accessed 30 November 2021 at https://archivo.estepais.com/inicio/historicos/148/14_Ciencia_Jornaleros_Lara.pdf
- Martínez, S. (2013), "Oaxacalifornian Urban Youth Spaces: Los Autónomos", in J. Fox, G. Rivera-Salgado and J. Santiago (eds), Voices of Indigenous Oaxacan Youth in the Central Valley: Creating Our Sense of Belonging in California [Research Report No. 1, July], Santa Cruz, CA: University of California-CCRE, pp. 48–56.
- Mirón, R. (2013), "Jornaleros mexicanos en California. El cambiante mercado laboral agrícola", Carta económica regional, 25 (110–112), 87–111.
- Palacios, M., and L. Moreno (2004), "Diferencias en la salud de jornaleros y jornaleros agrícolas migrantes en Sinaloa, México", Salud pública de México, 46 (4), 286–293.
- Sánchez, K. (2008), "Intermediarios laborales tradicionales. El acceso al trabajo y vínculos con el campo empresarial", in J. L. Seeffo (ed.), Desde los colores del mal: Una agenda para el campo mexicano, Zamora, Mexico: El Colegio de Michoacán, pp. 577–606.
- Sassen, S. (2000), "Women's burden: counter-geographies of globalization and the feminization of survival", Journal of International Affairs, 53 (2), 503–524.
- Stephen, L. (2007), Transborder Lives: Indigenous Oaxacans in Mexico, California, and Oregon, Durham, NC and London: Duke University Press.
- Velasco, L. (1995), "Migración Feminina y estrategias de sobrevivencia de la unidad doméstica. Un caso de estudio de las mujeres mixtecas en Tijuana", in S. González, O. Ruiz, L. Velasco and O. Woo (eds), Mujeres, migración y mapala en la frontera norte, Mexico: El Colegio de la Frontera Norte/El Colegio de México, pp. 37–64.
- Velasco, L. (2002), El regreso de la comunidad: migración indígena y agentes étnicos. Los mixtecos en la frontera México-Estados Unidos, Mexico: El Colegio de México/El Colegio de la Frontera Norte.
- Velasco, L., and C. Hernández (2018), Migración, trabajo y asentamiento en esclaves globales. Indígenas en Baja California Sur, Tijuana, Mexico: El Colegio de la Frontera Norte/Comisión Nacional para el Desarrollo de los Pueblos Indígenas.
- Velasco, L., C. Zlotnicki, and M. Coabís (2014), De jornaleros a colonos. Residencia, trabajo e identidad en el Valle de San Quirín, Tijuana, Mexico: El Colegio de la Frontera Norte.
- Weber, D. (2008), "Un pasado no visto: perspectivas históricas sobre la migración binacional de los pueblos indígenas", in L. Velasco (ed.), Migración, fronteras e identidades étnicas transnacionales, Tijuana, Mexico: El Colegio de la Frontera Norte/Miguel Ángel Porrúa, pp. 119–139.
- Wright, E. (2000), Class Counts: Studies in Marxism and Social Theory, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Zabin, C. (1992), Migración Oaxaqueña a los Campos Agrícolas de California. Un diálogo, University of California San Diego-Center for U.S.–Mexican Studies, accessed 30 November 2021 at <http://www.escholarship.org/uc/item/06k789k.pdf?origin=replicator>
- Zlotnicki, C. (2016), "Sistemas de intermediación laboral en una región agroexportadora del noroeste mexicano", Estudios, 9, 101–112.
- Zlotnicki, C. (2019), Made in Baja: The Lives of Farmworkers and Growers behind Mexico's Transnational Agricultural Boom, Oakland, CA: University of California Press.

9. Desértica Feminista: collision of theories, identity, and [im]migrant–border encounters

Ma. Eugenia Hernández Sánchez and Cynthia Bejarano

1. INTRODUCTION: BORDER COMMUNITIES, DESERT ENCOUNTERS

Feeling and thinking about the U.S.–Mexico border urges one to inhabit a particular space of constant re-elaboration. The border region is a complex cultural and geopolitically significant area that predates nation-states. As this is one of the most unequal borders in the world (Relaño Pastor, 2006), it is a challenge to develop conceptual frameworks that include both the long history that weaves together border communities and the fractures they face, due to current migration policies, security interventions, and the oppression of shared land. Varying migration processes between the U.S. and Mexico have been represented by different historical waves of migration and changing protocols. At times, there has been an emphasis on policing territories; through other periods the focus has shifted to developing long-term policies to reflect a future where control over people's bodies is desired. Other times still, its focus has been the detention of people and their deportation. These are cyclical and episodic tendencies used to create hyper-vigilant, antagonistic, and confrontational affirmation of a migration crisis.

U.S. and Mexican nation-states claim to share an agenda to curb migration, yet this agenda is one that paradoxically deepens transborder experiences, and that, colliding with the desert, nation-state policies, and bodies in movement, creates an Affective Border Community with reverberating consequences. Research on migration shows how "one of the strong impacts of globalization is the increasingly precarious conditions for workers worldwide, which has [a] huge effect on the conditions [in which] contemporary mobilities take place" (Oso & Ribas-Mateos, 2013, p. 3). Our concern is to situate analysis from the specific U.S.–Mexico border to weave with lived experience and knowledge from other regions with a global lens. The increased interest in women, children, and youth who migrate links their harrowing journeys to their countries' histories, and this includes their precarious arrival at their intended destination, for oftentimes they are left near the border, at a deportation site, or abandoned at some precarious place not unlike the place from which they desperately fled. For activists, researchers, and especially for personnel of both government and non-government shelters on either side of the border, this is neither a new nor a recent phenomenon (Hernández Sánchez, 2011).

The man-made construction of the border, its very concept, has acquired different historical meanings for Mexico and the U.S., one that corresponds to each nation-state's project of empire-building and claims to sovereignty. According to González Herrera (2008),

For the United States, the border became a process of imperial self-affirmation with political, cultural, racial, sanitary, economic, and military traits. For Mexico, the border, in spite of its northern origin based on powerful men from the new regime, remained foreign [and] atypical, and mainly continuous.

to be seen as a space of separation and distance from the powerful neighbor [, creating] a protective vacuum [to safeguard itself from the U.S.] (p. 15)

This historical construction helps us to understand different dimensions of inequality, as a characteristic naturalized between Mexico and the U.S. These characteristics also contribute to the justification for surveillance and exclusion (Bejarano, 2010). From this multilayered interaction of inequalities (Bustamante, 2000), we cannot avoid asking: what system(s) develop under such contradictory, yet relational inequality? And how can we explore intersecting socio-ecological systems to interrogate the possibilities of life and its threats? At the border, inequality is socially constructed and maintained via xenophobic exclusionary practices naturalized through unequal historical relations built on notions of fear of the unknown, fear of the foreigner, and fear of a hypothetical future in which identification of people's every move occurs, even more so than it already exists. Considering "the U.S. / Mexican border ... without doubt [as] one of the most contradictory geopolitical lines in the world—a militarized border with a 'good neighbor'" (Carril, 2015), we present three intersecting discussions to question and re-imagine the study of the border via collisions of theory, collisions of identity, and migrant-border encounters.

2. DESÉRTICA FEMINISTA AS DESERT GUIDE: INTRODUCING BONDS BETWEEN ECOFEMINISM, BORDER THEORIES, AND AFFECTIVE CARTOGRAPHY

Desértica Feminista is the collision of intimate relations within a system of institutionalized violence, which can be observed in the crossing of the desert, in its risks and opportunities, in the agency to look for a better life and survive. Desértica Feminista helps us understand spatial multi-species relations and to gain a communal consciousness of our surrounding environment to resist oppression. Desértica Feminista works as a guiding concept that interrogates and provokes analyses concerning the relationship between the institutions of [im]migration that work to obstruct women's agency and mobility (i.e., border patrol, U.S. customs and border protection, U.S. and Mexican military), and the institutions that help foster said agency and mobility ([im]migration advocacy groups). From a Latinx critical perspective, "institutions produce, circulate, and maintain the dominant culture's norms, values, language, policies, and ideologies" (Sensoy & DiAngelo, 2012, p. 80). As such, we conceptually link Desértica Feminista to the ever-evolving Chihuahuan desert. We consider its symbolic landscape, its biodiversity, its socio-historical context as a border space; how it juxtaposes the obstruction of people's movement by security apparatuses across its landscapes (i.e., border patrols) against border communities and other networks of people who advocate for migrants. Both sets of networks (security apparatus versus migrant advocacy and resistance) are embedded within an Affective Border Community that collides and ignites political tensions as the groups work to advocate for or against migrants' movements across borders. The Affective Border Community materializes into tension and conflict, advocacy and agency, in a landscape unfairly singled out as dangerous and barren by those who fail to recognize the hope and support migrants receive and provide here.

Desértica Feminista identifies the locus of this collision by thinking about desert archetypes (a land to continuously dominate), tropes (dangerous, empty, death), and the individuals within these tropes. Said individuals either institute these understandings within the stratification of border vigilance systems or work to care for migrants and advocate for their rights in open opposition to nativist narratives of sovereignty. This places desert archetypes and the people encompassing these tropes within a framework that describes the complexities involved in migrant crossings and Affective Border Communities' division. Therefore, the aim of Desértica Feminista is to contribute to discussions regarding the dialectics of the desert; while popular discourse would paint the desert as a harsh, unsafe landscape, filled with systems of surveillance, it is simultaneously a welcoming place for migrants who re-signify it by traversing its ecology and who meet people within networks that work to care and guide them. Together, these systems of contradiction—embedded in desert cultures and landscapes, as they are—coalesce as institutions of [im]migration, working either for or against migrants.

Desértica Feminista connects with "a theory in the flesh ... where the physical realities of our lives—our skin color, the land or concrete we grew up on, our sexual longings—all fuse to create an attempt to bridge the contradiction in our experience" (Moraga, 1981, p. 23). Desértica Feminista establishes a dialogue between ecofeminism (Cardona, 2016; Adams & Gruen, 2014; Perales Blanco, 2010) and border theory (Bustamante, 2000; Elenes, 2011; Bejarano, 2010) from a lived experience position that describes the desert as a guide between these tropes, as it draws from affect (Ahmed, 2010; Ahmed 2015; Gandhi, 2006) the constant tension between border communities, migrants, border agents, and the desert environment. Drawing from a feminist anti-oppressive research (Brown & Strega, 2005) in which knowledge is socially constructed "that accepts ambivalence and uncertainty" (pp. 255–264), we articulate the challenges presented between the natural environment of the desert and the built environment (McDowell, 1999) of nation-states, and how gender, migration, and landscape interlock (Razack, 2008) to explore a process of both alliance and collision.

3. EXAMINING COLLISION ONE: ECOFEMINISM AND BORDER THEORIES

The crux of Desértica Feminista is the collision between desert ecology and [im]migrant institutions, which is where women have stood at the forefront, challenging the archetypes and tropes at the border. Historically, women have addressed [im]migration, climate change, and other political crises including the exploitation of labor. A paradigm shift in ecofeminism makes its thinking from a perspective of a planet and not only the world. A planet is an ideal place where we acknowledge the connectivity of multiple species [and landscapes]. Contrarily, the world is a place of separation. In this tone, Haraway (2016) challenge us to think "ecojustice, which can also embrace diverse human people, it is high time that feminist exercise leadership in imagination, theory, and action to unravel the ties of both genealogy and kin, and kin and species" (p. 102). Vivar-Arenas (2015) argues, "Ecofeminist positions examine asymmetries [that occur] due to the institutionalized imbalance in the power relations between men and women[,] but also those power relations that are affecting the weak ecological balance that endangers the habitat" (n.p.), thus connecting the social dynamics with place. In this sense, ecofeminism and border theories share a commitment for understanding forms of relational knowledge that stem from the natural environment (the desert in this case) and the built environment (manmade borders) that often go ignored or overlooked. "Ecofeminism emerged as a new strand in feminism and works also for improving [the] living conditions of